

In April of 2019, Mayor London N. Breed announced the composition of her Juvenile Justice Reform Blue Ribbon Panel, which will focus on comprehensive and system-wide reform to San Francisco's juvenile justice system.

The Board of Supervisors voted to close San Francisco's Juvenile Hall by December 2021. The legislation created a task force to craft a plan for the closure.

Why? Like many other cities, we realize that incarcerating young people is additional trauma and does more harm than good.

Over time, fewer youth in Juvenile Hall means we spent $280,000 per youth last year for jail. Could we reinvest that funding to have better outcomes for our young people and our communities?

The HRC wants to hear from YOU on how we can better serve youth in San Francisco. What is missing from the recommendations that the Blue Ribbon Panel suggested?

In April of 2019, Mayor London N. Breed announced the composition of her Juvenile Justice Reform Blue Ribbon Panel, which will focus on comprehensive and system-wide reform to San Francisco's juvenile justice system.

The Board of Supervisors voted to close San Francisco's Juvenile Hall by December 2021. The legislation created a task force to craft a plan for the closure.

Why? Like many other cities, we realize that incarcerating young people is additional trauma and does more harm than good.

Over time, fewer youth in Juvenile Hall means we spent $280,000 per youth last year for jail. Could we reinvest that funding to have better outcomes for our young people and our communities?

The HRC wants to hear from YOU on how we can better serve youth in San Francisco. What is missing from the recommendations that the Blue Ribbon Panel suggested?

Emerging Themes:

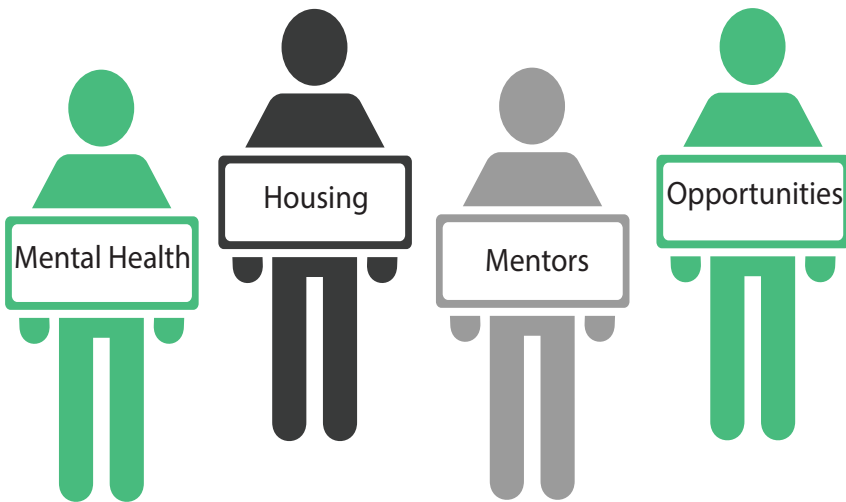

There are 43 active members on the Blue-Ribbon Panel. The panel generated more than 100 recommendations.

Several themes emerged from the recommendations:

Accountability Practices
Building Community Trust
Training

Approaches and Development of the system of care

As a part of the process, the recommendations are being shared with community members for feedback. Areas of focus identified by youth:

Emerging Themes:

There are 43 active members on the Blue-Ribbon Panel. The panel generated more than 100 recommendations.

Several themes emerged from the recommendations:

Accountability Practices
Building Community Trust
Training

Approaches and Development of the system of care

As a part of the process, the recommendations are being shared with community members for feedback. Areas of focus identified by youth:

